look back in reflection

When the Pevsner guides to Architecture in Wales are eventually revised, will any of these projects completed between 2013-15 find their way into these important cultural records as being socially and culturally significantfor the period?

The influence of BEDZED, the radical public housing project in Merton, south London has spread far and wide, but curiously as a model in its plans and sections overlapping workspace, gardens and habitation, it has not been taken up elsewhere in the UK. However a major member of the team, architect Stephen Harris, later moved to Llanfoist near Abergavenny and with Catherine Roberts they designed No.1 The Orchard, which would have to be found a place in any future Pevsner of housing architecture, that took its sustainability credentials seriously.
